Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to nanotube-based composite structures and, in particular, to nanotube-based sensors for sensing various chemicals, such as chemical warfare agents and biological organisms. 2. Description of the Related Art Nanotubes, which are carbon nanotubes or carbon nanotube ribbons, are considered to be of great interest due to their unique properties, such as quantum conductance, mechanical strength, and thermal conductivity. Nanotubes also are considered to be potentially useful in sensors because they can be chemically or electrostatically modified or doped so as to have a desired conductance. Therefore, because of their potential use in sensors, methods are needed for making nanotube-based sensors.Q: Dj
